

MORNING APPEAL.

Sunday.....August 10 1884

For President.

James G. Blaine, of Maine.

For Vice President.

John A. Logan, of Illinois.

DEMOCRACY'S DEATH STRUGGLE.

The Democratic party seems incapable of coming squarely before the country on a clean-cut issue and measuring with the Republican party in the open field. Conscious that there is nothing in its history or motives that will commend it to the thinking, upright voter, it resorts to puerile trickery and catchpenny expedients to win the support it cannot hope to command on its own merits. Its candidates for the Presidency for a quarter of a century have been chosen solely on the ground of expediency, and its platforms during that time have promised anything and everything that it was thought would capture votes. They have agreed in but one thing—bitter abuse and misrepresentation of Republicanism. The history of the last five Presidential contests show these facts clearly.

In 1864 the Democracy nominated a Union soldier—McClellan—who had been removed from his command for incapacity, in the hope of catching votes among Union men who might sympathize with him; and he was placed on a platform of "copperhead" utterances. Lincoln was triumphantly elected.

In 1868 this scheme was reversed. The candidate was a "copperhead" statesman, and the platform was made Union in sentiment—three years after the war was over. Seymour was beaten, and Grant entered the White House.

In 1872 the whole party organization and its principles were surrendered to a crowd of Republican bolters, and Greeley was made the nominee. The spectacle was an amazing one—to see a political party pass over the statesmen in its own ranks, men whose lives had been passed in the advocacy of Democracy, to take for its standard-bearer a man who had all his life been that party's uncompromising enemy—an original Abolitionist, and one of the founders of the Republican party itself. The platform was made up of equal parts of abuse of Republicanism and general gush on all other topics. Grant was re-elected.

In 1876, they nominated Tilden, solely because he had done some good work as a reformer of abuses in the Democratic government of New York, which abuses had become so outrageous as to make the party a stench in the nostrils of all honest men. They placed him on a platform which was nothing but a yell for "reform" and an appeal for power. The hollowness of the cry of "reform" and the character of Tilden were both shown up clearly by a most astounding attempt to defeat the will of the people. For the first time in American history a set effort was made to buy up Presidential electors for money, and to reverse the verdict of the election in entire States by the most gigantic treachery and frauds. It failed, and the Democracy went down again in ignominious defeat.

In 1880, all new expedients being exhausted, they tried the soldiers' dodge again, and nominated Hancock, simply because he was a Union soldier with a creditable record; and because "reform" was a good catch-word, made it and a tariff for revenue only their platform. The soldier dodge did not work as they expected, and thinking men repudiated the free trade heresy. Over they went once more and "sat in the dust in the valley of defeat, chewing the bitter cud of disappointment."

This year the signs of a more overwhelming defeat than ever are glowing in the political heavens.

Mrs. Blaine, according to a Washington correspondent, looks most imposing when she is not excited. She is a large woman, who sits bolt upright in her corner of the carriage. Her face is a strong one. Her features are large, and are so disposed as to convey a sense of power. They always wear the same proud expression.
